-A New York paper thinks "it is surprising that a speaker so polished and scholarly as Mr. Gladscone should use the word 'leniency' when there is in the language the better and more correct word 'lenity.'" Perhaps Mr. Gladstone thinks there is more suphony in "lenieucy." The choice of a word frequently depends on the construction of a sentence.

-A Mr. Hadden has submitted to the British authoriti a a singular plan for laying a temporary railway for the transportation of English troops in Abyssmia, the novelty in the road being the sleepers, which he proposes to construct of flattened cylinders of sheet iron, closed at one end, and which, when once placed in position, a e to be well rammed with sand or earth, and then closed also at the other end. Little or no billast is required, and the rails are secured to the sle-pers by olip-pieces, one riveted on and the other made to turn like a door-button. -A Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette says that the opinion is gaining ground there that the President has been "understed." Whereupon the New York Times observes that "ht is by no means so fashionable as it was a year ago to denounce him as utterly imcompetent and powerless. We think it not at all unlikely that this mistake has been made. President Johnson's Messages and other State papers will compare favorably, in point of ability, force and effectiveness, with those of any President we have ever ha ; and the steady determination with which he has adhered to his original policy is beginning to have an effect even upon those who dissent most widely from it."

-Mrs. Francis Ann Kemble has consented to give a course of dramatic readings from Shakspeare's plays, in Philadelphia and other principal cities, commencing in Washington on the first of March. These entertainments, as heretofore given by Mrs. Kemble, are of the most intellectual as well as interesting character, she being one of the most accomplished elocutionists and scholarly students of Shakspears now living. Besides this, there are m in of the younger generation that will gladly embrace the opportunity of attending them for the sake of seeing the great dramatic artiste whom they have heard so much of as the once popular idol, "Fanny Kemble"

swiritual medium. It is said that the information about the locality of the treasure came in a roundabout way. Directions from a medium in California were given to consult a Boston medium, the latter referred to a Hartford medium, and the Hartford one sends the searcher to Hazaraville. The medium at the latter place said "go ahead;" a deposit was made to insure the owner of the land against damages, and diggers are working for three dollars for five hours' work. A local 'paper says: "They hope to reach the scrong boxes by Saturday THREE DOLLARS A YEAR; Two Dollars for Six next. The only encouragement they have now, besides the statements of the mediums, is that the ground sounds hollow."

CHARLESTON.

FRIDA' MORNING, JANUARY 10, 1868.

The President and Mr. Stanton.

The report of Senator Howard in the case of Mr. STANTON is not so much a defence of the suspended Secretary as a criticism of the conduct of the President in opposing the will of Congress in the matter of reconstruction. It is more important in subject than strong in argument; and, while it may flatter the pride of Mr. STAN-TON, it is not likely to secure to him a new lease of that power which he used with so little discretion.

Senator Howard says that Congress in tended to prevent such a removal as that of Mr. STARTON, and that the President should have been notified that there was cause for suspension. This will be admitted; but Mr. Johnson must be guided by the laws of Congress, and not by its intentions, and, that he did satisfy himself that there was good reason for the removal of the Secretary-at-War, his message to the Senate is sufficient proof. Nor can Mr. Howard sustain his position that the President has recognized the constitutionality of the Tenure of Office act by suspending Mr. STANTON under its provisions. No act of the President can make constitutional what is in itself unconstitutional; no official act can make that legal which is in itself illegal; as well might it be said that the President, in assigning General CANBY to the command of this military district, acknowledged the binding force and constitutionality of the reconstruction laws.

The report then analyzes the President's message to Congress in relation to Mr. STANTON, and asserts that it has been the aim of Mr. Johnson to thwart and hinder the success of reconstruction. This being asserted to be the case, although it cannot be shown that the President has in any instance failed to enforce any act of Congress whatsonver, Senator Howard applauds the refusal of Mr. STANTON to resign, and compliments warmly his "eminent talents, his patriotism, his vigilance, his untiring devotion." It is then denied that Mr. STANTON was at one time in accord with the Presidential policy, and objections is made to Mr. JUHNSON'S claim that he is responsible for the conduct of the Executive Department. The New Orleans riot is dragged in and discussed at length, and the report concludes with a resolution that the Senate do not concur in the suspension of Mr. STANTON. When the report of the committee is adopted by the Senate the tug of war will come; and then it will be seen whether Mr. JOHNSON Will allow Mr. STANTON to return to his old office, or whether he will summarily dismiss him, in defiance of what Congress may threaten or wish to do. The up a treaty pledging themselves to resist course of General Grant will be carefully watched by both Democrat and Radical and, whether he dismisses himself or deolines to give up possession to Mr. STANTON, he will probably be compelled to commit himself definitely as an opponent or a supporter of the policy of Congress.

But interest in the late Secretary of War is gradually growing less. There is no demand that he be reinstated; there is no shouting against Mr. Jonnson; there is no important expression of opinion either one way or the other except within the walls of the capitol. Practical reconstruction and the management of the debt are the ques--A new Insurance Company is to be started tions which press upon the national mind, and whilst subjects of so much gravity are forced upon public attention a Mr. STANTON cannot expect to enjoy even the barren honors of political martyrdom.

Current Prices.

During the past year there has been but little progress towards the standard prices of before the war. Flour, wheat, cotton, hay, iron, leather, turpentine, resin, crude oils, and wools are lower than they were in 1866; but corn, molasses, butter, cheese, salt, and sugar are higher than they were twelve months ago. The staple products of the South have steadily declined in price, and food and supplies have showed a disposition to continue to advance. For the purpose of showing the change in the value of leading articles of produce, we present the following comparisons, giving wholesale quotations at New York on the 81st December of the last four years.

With the exceptions named there is a reduction of about ten per cent., but were it possible to compare the prices of manufactured goods it would be found that in them the decline has been far more considerable. This is due to the fact that too great a proportion of the labor and capital of the country is engaged in manufactures, and to the -It appears that people down East are still small demand for ordinary descriptions of digging for buried treasure, the latest phase of manufactured goods. The want of adequate

THE DAILY NEWS. that manis having appeared at Hazardville, profits upon manufacturing, however, may tribution at no distant day.

Those who anticipate an early return to normal values will, it is feared, be disappointed. The obstacles to cheapness are too radical to be readily overcome. Our population has been reduced by the war, and our productive energy is held in check by a thousand uncertainties growing out of the political, financial and industrial derangements of the times, which interfere with the calculations of capitalists, lessen the probability of profit and support prices at their present oppressive height. If in five years we have the same prices that were current in 1860 we may consider ourselves fortunate.

Co-operative Farming.

The English farmer is generally considered to be the staunch friend of conservatism, and the sturdy enemy of all new fangled ideas about High Church, Low Church or Broad Church, -extension of the suffrage the vote by ballot, or the separation of Church and State. This has been true enough, but now the facts are changed. The farmer, whatever his political faith, is never so conservative that he will not make use of the ingenious improvements of the age; and, although slow enough in learning o love BRIGHT, MILL, or GLADSTONE, he is sufficiently quick in appreciating the advantages of improved ploughs, patent reap ers, and the other mechanical appliances o the present system of farming. But John Bull the farmer was, and is, an independent man. He had rather see his grain rot in the stacks than sell it at less than he thought it was worth, he never gave up his inalienable right of grumbling and growling, he was the last who would have been expected to unite in any such levelling schemes as those of co-operation.

But the thing has actually been done The co-operative system in England has presented a new phase, and a society called he agricultural and horticultural association has been established. The liability of the members is limited to £1 per share, and the members are to be supplied with the best description of implements, manures cattle, food and seeds at trade prices, without the intervention of the agent's profit. In addition to this, it is arranged that the whole of the net profits of the association shall be divided amongst the members.

Mr. THOMAS HUGHES, M. P., the author f "Tom Brown's School Days," has shown much practical interest in the co-operative novement. It was he who presided at the meeting at which the agricultural association was founded, and he loses no opportunity of pointing out. how advantageous is would be to the community at large if they adopted the principle of co-operation in every branch of business to which it was

The amount of capital invested in co pperative societies in England is £1,046,310 the amount lent on deposit £118,023, the aggregate profit last year £372,317, and the average return to the individual stockholder thirty-six per cent. These figure the day with many of the farmers and agriculturists. Belief and confidence in cooperation are spreading rapidly and steadily and every new society that is formed is an addition to the wealth of the people by enabling them to make a "co-operative shilling" produce as much of food and clothing as can be bought for an independent "antico-operative shilling and three pence." The man who can buy at his co-operative store for one dollar what is sold in other stores at one dollar and a quarter, can live in comfort while the ordinary spender will starve Wages are small and profits have been great; and the surest way of turning every farthing to the best possible account is by supporting, sustaining and encouraging the system of co-operation.
